

"It is a very spiritual, embracing program. You inspire me!" Tom Fedora—Wallingford, CT

"How happy God must be that you have captured the beauty of His world, along with the simplicity of scenic rhythms. The consistency of color, the design of composition, and the revealing of personalities and character is phenomenal."

Eileen Keenan—Coffeville, KS

"Beautiful images and great music."

NATIVE FACES DESERT LIGHT

Portraits of Native Americans in the Southwest by D.H. Davis

Selected from D.H. Davis' "Native American in the Landscape Collection."

A black and white photograph of a woman standing in a desert landscape. She is wearing a dark, patterned shawl and is looking towards the camera. The background shows desert rock formations and a cloudy sky.

A portion of the proceeds from your purchase goes to fund photographic mentoring for aspiring Native American photographers.

What is Facerock Productions, LLC?

Facerock Productions, LLC is a for-profit company that helps with the production and distribution of photographic art around the world. The primary theme of the product line is photographic art showing the positive faces of Native American people including images created by selected Native American photographers.

The mission of the company is to provide an opportunity for independent family enterprises on the various reservations to have access to interesting local products that they can offer for sale to the general public. The range of products from note cards to limited edition collectible fine art photographs is available for sale from these enterprises as well as from trading posts, gift shops and fine art galleries. A portion of the profits from these sales is set aside in a fund for training aspiring Native American photographers who don't have access to equipment or traditional training opportunities.

“Native Faces—Desert Light” is a multimedia production created to allow viewers to familiarize themselves with the images from D.H. Davis’ “Native American in the Landscape Collection”. The collaboration on this project is indicative of the Facerock Productions mission statement. Many individuals volunteered their time and energy to make themselves and their families available for photographs, provide the music, and translate English to Navajo and Navajo to English. Corporate assistance from the folks at Fujifilm Professional and Pendleton Woolen Mills is ongoing and helps make this mission possible.

Facerock Productions will grow with the same collaborative efforts that brought it into existence. We continue to create new images and help create a connection among all peoples. If you know of an individual or family that would like to be involved with any phase of this operation, please share your ideas with us and we will do our best to put them to work. And, if you know of sponsors, benefactors, or opportunities to place our protégés, we are open for this participation as well. Thank you for your support.

THANK YOU FOR YOUR SUPPORT OF OUR PROJECTS

Long ago, settlers and the U.S. government forced our Native American population onto land deemed worthless at the time. The great irony now is how the desert southwest has become one of the most visited and photographed icons in the world. We now ask permission to visit these enchanted areas.

Through David's work we begin to understand how each Native American relates to his land and to each other. Perhaps more importantly, we may even glimpse a bit of our own connection to the original Americans. And, the photographs that are being produced by the aspiring photographers David is mentoring are a testament to the future success of Facerock Productions and its unique mission statement.

How did D.H. Davis get chosen for this project?

David Davis and I moved to Grand Junction about the same time. Although we did not know each other then, our paths were destined to cross. I first met Dave at meeting of our local professional photographers in the early 90’s.

Although Dave was one of the softest-spoken members, I soon realized that he was greatly respected by the photographers. He was busy building a portrait and commercial photography business, but at the same time, he exhibited a fairly rare trait... he LOVED photography. Even when his workday was done, he loved to shoot for himself. He was as passionate about photography as was I.

The fates rolled their dice and Dave accompanied me on one of my earliest journeys to the Antelope Slot Canyons. We were both mesmerized by the exquisite beauty. But Dave kept mumbling about bringing some Native American friends down inside Antelope. I am thinking, “You’ve got this great landscape and you want to muck it up with people?”

Fortunately, I kept my mouth shut and David followed his vision. We became friends and often explored the southwest together. As I got to know him better, I realized that he, like all great artists, did not choose this particular project. Rather, the project chose him. He never set out to photograph Native Americans in the landscape, but looking back, it seems his whole professional career was building in that direction.

As his vision clarified and more willing people became available, he tackled increasingly more complex images. Some of you have been to the areas shown in the “Native Faces—Desert Light” show. Now imagine in addition to the landscape, juggling the dynamics of mothers, children, clothing, fathers, food, wind, sand, heat, or freezing temperatures... well, you get the point!

I have been fortunate to accompany Dave on several of his projects. The thing that most strikes me, besides his infinite patience, is how he has won everyone’s trust and always photographs each subject with honesty, integrity and admiration.

The resulting images are multi-layered gems. Not just portraits, not just landscapes—his genius combines both into haunting photos of a proud people and the land they inhabit. This is an ongoing project for David. He only paused now to gain some perspective and to share with others, for the first time, his progress to date.

Currently, we are searching for people who can work in family type settings. We need both men and women, especially youth and elders for a series of illustrations. Since most of the Native American history relies on an oral tradition, there is a storytelling bond that exists in most families. We would like to communicate this notion in our photographs. It is so important to record the elders and their vibrancy while they are still with us.

You may e-mail us at: dhdavis@facerockproductions.com, call 970.243.1507, or send a letter to D. H. Davis at Facerock Gallery, P.O. Box 3060, Grand Junction, CO 81501. Ideally, we would like to have a recent photo of you for name/face association. We would also like to know your name, and how and when is the best time to contact you. If you have family that can also work with you, please give us a run down on their relationship to you and whether or not you might have ideas that will also work for you. We look forward to working with you.

OTHER WAYS TO PARTICIPATE—

The other ways that you can participate with us is only limited by your imagination. We are always accepting donations of tools, jewelry, clothing, artifacts, and funds. For obvious reasons, all of these items must be legally obtained or reasonable facsimiles to the originals. From time to time we will take assistants with us on location to help with a variety of photographic and support duties. This is a great way to become a part of the Facerock team. Just contact us and we will see if your desire to participate matches what we have available.

Aspiring Native American photographers may apply for our mentor program. We will have new openings when our next round of funding becomes available.

If you would like to participate in this ongoing process or know of someone who does, please contact us at:

Or e-mail us at dhdavis@facerockproductions.com

A portion of the profits from all Facerock Productions products help fund Facerock's Native Arts project. These funds provide mentors and other learning opportunities for aspiring photographers on the Navajo, Hopi, and Pueblo reservations throughout the Southwest USA. If you would like to contribute to this project, contact us today.

PARTICIPATE AS A SUBJECT OF THE PHOTOGRAPHS—

We are continuously grateful to our Native American friends who are part of the “Native American in the Landscape” project. Each of our subjects has not only been a participant but also a teacher. Most have been unselfish in recommending other family members or friends to help us create the images that will preserve vignettes of a culture that is changing and adapting as it has for centuries.

If you know of someone of Native American heritage who would like to work with us, please have contact us by e-mail, snail mail, or telephone at the gallery. We will be glad to communicate with anyone who shows an interest. Although many of our projects are set in motion weeks and months ahead of time, we always have a list of subjects that we need or want to photograph.
